General observations

The indications of the products or services that appear in the titles of the classes constitute general indications relative to the sectors to which these products or services belong in principle. That is why it is important to consult the alphabetical list to ensure the exact classification of each specific product or service.

Products

If a product can not be classified using the list of classes, the explanatory notes or the alphabetical list, the following observations indicate the criteria that should be applied :

- a) A finished product is classified, in principle, according to its function or its destination. If the function or destination of a finished product is not mentioned in any title of the classes, this product is classified by analogy with other similar finished products that appear in the alphabetical list. If none exist, other criteria are applied such as the matter of which it is made or its mode of operation;
- b) A finished product with multiple uses (such as a radio-alarm combination) can be classified into all the classes that correspond to each of its functions or its destinations. If these functions or destinations are not mentioned in any class title, the other criteria mentioned in section a) apply.;
- c) Raw materials, raw or semi-processed, are classified, in principle, taking into account the subject matter of which they are constituted;

Products

- d) The products destined to be part of another product are not, in principle, classified in the same class as the latter; they are only available in cases where products of this kind can not normally have other applications. In all other cases, the criterion established in section a) applies;
- e) If a product, finished or not, that must be classified according to the subject matter of which it is constituted, is in fact constituted by different subjects, the classification is made, in principle, according to the predominant material;
- f) The kits adapted to the products they will contain are classified, in principle, in the same class as the latter.

Services

If a service can not be classified using the list of classes, the explanatory notes or the alphabetical list, the following observations indicate the criteria that should be applied :

- a) Services are classified, in principle, according to the branches of activities defined by the titles of the classes of services and their explanatory notes or, if not, by analogy with other similar services that appear in the alphabetical list;

Services

b) All rental services are classified, in principle, in the same classes in which the services that are provided with the help of the rented objects are classified (for example, telephone rental, which belongs to class 38). Leasing services are similar to rental services and therefore should be classified in the same way. However, leasing with a purchase option (leasing) is classified in class 36, since it is a financial service.

c) The advisory services, information or consultation are classified, in principle, in the same class as the services on which the advice, information or consultation is concerned. For example, consultations on transport (cl 39), queries on the management of commercial businesses (cl 35), consultations on financial matters (cl 36), consultations on beauty care (cl 44) . The electronic communication of this advice, information or consultation (by telephone, via computer) has no effect on the classification of the service.

d) In principle, the services provided under the franchises are classified in the same class as the specific services offered by the franchisor (for example, business advice related to franchises (cl. 35), financial services related to franchises (cl 36) and legal services related to franchises (cl 45).
